

UC-NRLF

5B 248 663

A FAMILY ALBUM

A FAMILY ALBUM AND OTHER POEMS

by

ALTER BRODY

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY
LOUIS UNTERMAYER

New York    B. W. HUEBSCH    Mcmxviii

Copyright, 1918, by B. W. Huebsch

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

70 1918
ALBANY, N. Y.

TO RUSSIA

396660

Some of the poems in this book appeared in the following magazines: The Atlantic Monthly, The Outlook, The Seven Arts, The Dial, Hearst's, Everybody's, McCall's, The Independent, The Bookman, The American Hebrew and American Jewish Chronicle, to the editors of which the author expresses his acknowledgment for the right to reprint.

INTRODUCTION

A favorite literary theory (and one which I always defended) concerns the vast amount of remarkable poetic work that is produced in America by poets whose names are known only to the postmaster and the callous clerks who have charge of the rejection slips. If once these inglorious but never mute Miltons could reach their audience, our native literature would develop a sudden and spontaneous power that would rouse the nation and blend our polyglot voices in one homogeneous choir. At least, so I thought. My first shock came when I helped read the manuscripts submitted to the late lamented (by some) Masses. True, I became acquainted with a few thousand names I had never seen before; I was made privy to the rhymed and vers libre secrets of a generation of publicly intimate young people; I became convinced that every motorman, bill-collector, plumber, minister, travelling salesman and undergraduate had read Whitman and was convinced he could improve upon him. But the fresh, personal and authentic note that should have been so strikingly in evidence was striking only in its absence.

A year or two later The Seven Arts was founded, and part of its unwritten programme was based on the hope of discovering new and significant talent. I entered upon my combined duties as advisory editor, second reader and theorist with renewed enthusiasm. But, with two exceptions, my experience was almost identically the same as when I performed a similar function a little earlier in my journalistic career. The only new thing I learned was that most of the writers referred to in the previous paragraph seemed to have stopped imitating Whitman and were busy boiling down the psycho-analytic studies of Doctors Freud and Jung. It may be blasphemy these revolutionary days, but it is a fact that the best poetry was submitted by the best known poets.

This was the cheerless conclusion that had been forced upon me the day that a particularly high tower of manuscripts was left on my desk. I remember slitting the envelopes with a certain pity for letter-carriers in general and a contempt for theories in particular. And then my eye was arrested by a few lines signed Alter Brody. I may as well admit that it was the name, with its frank incongruity, that held me first. But it was the brief poem that held me longest. It was called "Lamentations" and it was the sort of poignant picture that persists and grows stronger after the mind has passed to other matters. I took up another poem. Then two more. There were only four sheets (a surprisingly modest amount compared to the quires sent in by most of the clamoring applicants for space) and they were of uneven quality. But in all of them there was revealed a sincerity and sensitivity so keen that they seemed to possess not only the soul but the blood and bones of poetry. In those four poems I caught an intensity that was both racial and individual, an utterance that was no less personal because it caught up the accents of a people.

So with this collection of his poems. What racial significance it has is almost always unconscious. And yet the unifying note is its definitely Semitic undertone—that queer blend of love and hate, brutality and tenderness, cynicism and faith, of a great scorn and a greater suffering. It is this Hebraic power that makes his lines seem to leap hotly from the cold black and white of the printed page. Everywhere in these pages one sees the impress of an alert and original mind, of imagination fed by strengthening fact; of sight that is sharpened by insight. This pungency is seldom absent, but it is most clearly seen in his poems where Brody shows a passionate participation in city life and, at the same time, an apparent detachment from it. Much of this work is an interpretation of industrial activity against a background of ancient dreams; young America seen through the eyes of old Russia. Witness "Kartúshkiya-Beróza" which is, in microcosm, a whole Russian-Jewish boyhood; "Times Square" where one world impinges on another; "Ma," "A Family Album" and "The Neurological Institute" which is a sort of Spoon River Anthology of the East Side. The memory of the Ghetto haunts this volume, even Broadway takes on the quality of a seething Judengasse.

There is, let me hasten to add, no attempt at reconstruction here. Brody offers no panaceas, no partisan pronouncements; he attempts no propaganda. He is content to record the interplay of environment and heredity, to fix the moment when the fact blossoms into fantasy, to follow the line between realism and rapture. He pierces the superficials of his subjects and goes deep, turning away from nothing that is raw or unpleasant. He does not reject what is usually concealed, knowing that ugliness is as inextricably knit with life as beauty; his poetry seems striving to find the point where what is ugly can be balanced and finally fused with the whole. These occasional discords and suspensions are not only natural but necessary in any work that purports to be a rendering of truth. "Art," this poet seems to summarize, "is not only a record but a harmonizing of dissonances."

This is what gives Brody's lines such vitality. A dozen poems illustrate his gift of making a picture and then, with a slight turn of phrase, making it come to life. Observe "The Deserted Church," "A Funeral: Italian Quarter," "A City Park," "November"—to name four utterly dissimilar examples. We have, in each of these, the sharp word, the vivid image fused and fired by something warmer and more vivifying than theories of art. It is a personal magic that pervades these young and passionate pages—a magic that is even more haunting for being human. Poetry is almost the last thing that one can be dogmatic about, and yet I am sure that these poems—. . . But it is better that they should speak for themselves.

LOUIS UNTERMEYER.

CONTENTS

Introduction,	7
Kartúshkiya-Beróza,	13
A Family Album,	18
Ma,	25
Portrait,	30
In the Circulating Library: Seward Park,	31
Lamentations,	36
Times Square,	37
Ghetto Twilight,	39
In the Children's Reading Room,	40
Jean,	43
An Old Picture,	44
On the Street-Car,	47
From the Third Story Window,	49
A Bedroom Interior,	52
A Funeral: Italian Quarter,	54
Cross-Streets,	56
A City Park,	57
Before the Storm,	58
A Sunlit Street,	59
A Sunlit Room,	60
By the Window,	61
The Hill-Path,	64
Soliloquy of a Realist,	67
Pastel: from the Williamsburgh Bridge,	72
The Fire-Garden,	74

On the Bridge, 78
From the Jersey Bank, 80
November, 81
The Neurological Institute, 82
To-Day, 93
The Fiddler, 94
Crowds, 95
Grotesque, 96
A Clump of Pines: Mt. Morris Park, 99
On a Park Bench, 101
The Play Pond: Central Park, 102
The Deserted Church, 104
My Belovéd, 106
A Brooklyn By-Street, 107
Nocturne: Fifth Avenue and Central Park, 110
Winter Nocturne: The Hospital, 111
After the Lecture, 112
Nocturne: Central Park, 113
Spring Tryst, 115
At the Florist's, 117
A Postscript, 119
Nocturne, 120
A Row of Poplars: Central Park, 121
The Old Courtesan, 123
Pride, 124
Psalm CLI, 126
A Lost Leader, 128
To Russia,—1917, 130

KARTÚSHKIYA-BERÓZA

It is twelve years since I have been there —

I was born there,

In the little town, by the river —

It all comes back to me now

Reading in the newspaper:

"The Germans have seized the bridge-head at Kartúshkiya-Beróza;

*The Russians are retreating in good order across the marshes.
The town is in flames."*

Kartúshkiya-Beróza!

Sweet-sounding, time-scented name —

Smelling of wide-extending marshes of hay;

Smelling of cornfields;

Smelling of apple-orchards;

Smelling of cherry-trees in full blossom;

Smelling of all the pleasant recollections of my childhood —

Smelling of Grandmother's kitchen,

Grandmother's freshly-baked dainties,

Grandmother's plum-pudding —

Kartúshkiya-Beróza!

I see before me a lane running between two rows of straggling cottages —

I cannot remember the name of the lane;

I do not know whether it has any name at all;

But I remember it was broad and unpaven and shaded with wide-branching chestnuts
And enters the market-place
Just a few houses after my Grandfather's —
Kartúshkiya-Beróza!
I can see it ever now
My Grandfather's house —
On the lane, to the right, as you come from the marketplace;
A big, hospitable frame building —
Big as my Grandfather's own heart,
And hospitable as Grandmother's smile.
I can see it even now,
With the white-pillared porch in the center and the sharp-gabled roof
Pierced with little windows;
And the great quadrangular garden behind it;
And the tall fence surrounding the garden;
And the old well in the corner of the garden;
With the bucket-lift
Rising over the fence —
Kartúshkiya-Beróza!
I can see him even now,
My Grandfather —
Bending over me, tall and sad-eyed and thoughtful —
Lifting me up and seating me on his knees
Lovingly,
And listening to all my childish questions and confessions;
Pardoning, admonishing, remonstrating —
Satisfying my interrogative soul with good-humored indulgence.
And my Grandmother,
Dear little woman!

I can never dissociate her from plum-pudding and apple-dumplings,
And raisin-cakes and almond-cakes and crisp potato-pancakes
And the smell of fish frying on the fire.
And then there is my cousin, Miriam,
Who lived in the yellow house across the lane —
A freckle-faced, cherry-eyed little girl with a puckered-up nose —
I was very romantic about her.
And then there is my curse, my rival at school, my archenemy —
Jacob,
The synagogue sexton's boy,
On whom I was always warring —
✓ God knows on what battlefield he must be lying now!
And then there is Nathan and Joseph and Berel and Solomon
And Ephraim, the baker's boy,
And Baruch and Gershen and Mendel
And long-legged, sandy-haired Emanuel who fell into the pond with me that time,
While we were skating on the ice —
Kartúshkiya-Beróza!
I can see myself even now
In the lane on a summer's day,
Cap in hand, chasing after dragon-flies —
Suddenly, nearby, sounds the noise of drums and bugles —
I know what that means!
Breathlessly I dash up the lane.
It is the regiment quartered in the barracks at the end of the town, in its annual parade on the highway —
How I would wish to be one of those gray-coated heroes!

I watch them eager-eyed —
And run after them until they reach the Gentile Quarter —
And then I turn back.
Kartúshkiya-Beróza!
I am in the market-place —
At a Fair;
The market-place is a heaving mass of carts and horses and oxen;
The oxen are lowing, the horses are neighing, the peasants are cursing in a dozen different dialects.
I am in Grandfather's store,
On the lower end of the market-place, right opposite the public well —
The store is full of peasants and peasant women, bargaining at the top of their voices;
The peasants are clad in rough sheepskin coats and fur caps;
The peasant women are gay in bright-colored cottons and wear red kerchiefs around their heads;
My Grandfather is standing behind the counter measuring out rope to some peasants;
Grandmother is cutting a strip of linen for a peasant woman, chaffering with another one at the same time about the price of a pair of sandals —
And I am sitting there, behind the counter, on a sack of flour,
Playing with my black-eyed little cousin. . . .

Kartúshkiya-Beróza!

Kartúshkiya-Beróza!

It comes back to me suddenly —

That I am sitting here, with a newspaper in my hand
Reading:

*“The Germans have seized the bridge-head at Kartúshkiya-Beróza;
The Russians are retreating in good order across the marshes.
The town is in flames!”*

A FAMILY ALBUM

I

WORN and torn by many fingers
It stands on the bed-room dresser,
Resting back against its single cardboard buttress,
(There were two)
The gilt clasp that bound it, loose and broken,
The beautiful Madonna on its cover, faded and pencil-marked,
And the coarse wood of its back showing through its velvet lining.

II

I remember the time that my sister Pauline bought it for the house
(300 Cherry Street, fourth floor, right-hand side, front)
Thirteen years ago,
With the proceeds of her first week at the factory.
It was beautiful then,
The golden-haired, grave-eyed Madonna that adorned it.
Her blue eyes were ever so much bluer and clearer, and so sweetly pensive,
Her golden hair fell forward over her bare breast,
Brighter and yellower than gold,
And there were no black pencil marks across the pure white of her brow

Or the delicate pink of her cheeks.
She was beautiful . . .
And my father,
I remember my father didn't like that album,
And murmured against the open-bosomed female on its cover,
"It is sinful to have such a picture in a Jewish home!"
But I,
I loved that album because of its glorious, golden-haired Madonna.
And when I was left alone in the house
I would stand in the parlor for hours
And gaze into her ecstatic face
Half reverently, half tenderly.
And sometimes,
When I was doubly certain of being alone,
I would drag a chair up to the mantel-piece
And get on top of it,
And, timidly extending my hand,
Touch with my trembling fingers the yellow threads of her hair as they lay across her breast,
Or the soft slope of her breast into her loose robe.
And once, I remember,
Ashamed of my feelings, yet unable to repress them,
I drew the picture closer to my face.
And pressed my lips passionately on that white bosom —
My first kiss. . . .

III

Somehow I never cared to open the gilt clasp of the album
And look through the photographs that were collecting there:
Photographs brought here from Russia,

Photographs taken here at various times,
Grandfathers, grandmothers, aunts, uncles, cousins,
Sisters and sisters-in-law, brothers and brothers-in-law;
Photographs of some of the many boarders that always occupied our bedrooms;
(The family usually slept on folding-beds in the kitchen and parlor
Together with some other boarders)
Boarders-in-law; sweethearts, wives, husbands of the boarders;
Group pictures: family pictures, shop pictures, school pictures.
Somehow I never cared to open the gilt clasp of the album
And look through that strange kaleidoscope of Life.
But now,
As I find myself turning its heavy cardboard pages,
Turning them meditatively back and forth,
My brain loosens like the gilt clasp of the album,
Unburdening itself of its locked memories,
Page after page, picture after picture,
Until the miscellaneous photographs take to themselves color and meaning,
Standing forth out of their places like a series of paintings;
As if a Master-Artist had gone over them with his brush,
Revealing in them things I did not see in the originals,
Solving in Art that which baffled me in Life.
And all the while as I go through the album, supporting the cover with my hand,
The yellow-haired Madonna gazes at me from under my fingers,
Sadly, reproachfully.

IV

Poor, warm-hearted, soft-headed, hard-fisted Uncle Isaac
 In his jaunty coat and flannel shirt,
 Stiff and handsome and moustached,
 Standing as if he were in evening dress —
 His head thrown backward, his eyes fixed forward;
 Conscious of the cleanliness of his face and hands,
 Fresh washed from a day's grime at the coal cellar.
 When I look at his bold, blank face
 My mind tears through the dense years,
 Along the crazy alley of his life,
 Back to a Lithuanian village on a twig of the Vistula.
 Kartúshkiya-Beróza (what a sweet name — Beróza is the Russian for birch-trees)
 And from a background of a dusty road meandering between high, green banks of foliage
 I feel two black eyes looking at me strangely,
 Two black passion-pregnant eyes
 Nestling in a little dark face.

V

Every Saturday afternoon in the summertime
 When the town was like a green bazaar
 With the houses half-hidden under leaves and the lanes drifting blindly between the dense shade-trees
 After the many-coursed Sabbath dinner and the long synagogue services that preceded it
 Mother took the four of us over to Grandpa's
 A few houses up the lane
 Where the aunts and the uncles and the cousins and the nephews and the nieces
 In silk and in flannel and in satin and in linen,
 Every face shining with a Sabbath newness,

Gathered on the porch for the family promenade:
Up the lane and across the Gentile quarter and around the Bishop's orchard;
Through the Polish Road past the Tombs of the Rebels to the haunted red chapel at the crossroads —
And back again by cross cuts through the cornfields,
With the level yellow plain mellowing mystically around us in the soft sunshine,
And the sunset fading behind us like the Sabbath,
At twilight — just before the evening service —
Every Saturday afternoon, in summertime.

VI

They rise in my brain with mysterious insistence
The blurred images of those Sabbath walks —
Poignantly, painfully, vaguely beautiful,
Half obliterated under the cavalcade of the years,
They lurk in the wayside of my mind and ambush me unawares —
Like little children they steal behind me unawares and blindfold me with intangible fingers
Asking me to guess who it is:
Across a wide city street a patch of pavement like a slab of gold;
A flash of sunlight on a flying wheel —
And I am left wondering, wondering where I have seen sunlight before?
By a holiday-thronged park walk, a trio of huge trees thrust their great, brown arms through uplifted hillocks of green leaves —
And I stand staring at them penetratively;
Trying to assure myself that they were real,
And not something that had swum up in my mind

From a summer that has withered years ago —
In the beaches by the wayside on the Polish Road,
Isled among the birch woods,
As you come out of Kartúshkiya-Beróza.
On my bed, within the padded prison-walls of sleep, lurching through a night of dreams;
I am awakened by a shrill wide-spreading triumphant outburst of incessant twittering —
Under my window in the park,
Catching like fire from tree to tree, from throat to throat
Until the whole green square seems ablaze with joy,
As if each growing leaf had suddenly found tongue —
And I raise myself in my bed, dreamily, on my elbows Listening with startled attentiveness to a sweet, clear twitter-ing in my brain
As of a hundred populous treetops vying with the pebble-tuned waters of a brook
Gurgling timidly across a wide road.
In a hallway among a party of girls and young men tripping downstairs for an outing on a Sunday morning,
The coarse, keen pungency of satin from some girl's new shirtwaist,
Through my nose into my brain pierces like a rapier —
And suddenly I am standing on a sunny country porch with whitewashed wooden columns,
All dressed up for a Sabbath walk,
In a red satin blouse with a lacquered, black belt
With my mother in her blue silk Sabbath dress and grandmother with a black lace shawl around her head
With my sisters and my brother and portly Uncle Zalman with his fat, red-bearded face
And my grandfather stooping in his shining black capote with his grizzled beard and earlocks and thoughtful, tiny eyes

And poor Aunt Bunya who died of her first childbirth, with her roguish-eyed young husband
And smooth-shaven, moustached Uncle Isaac half-leaning, half-sitting on the bannister with his little girl clamped playfully between his knees
And his wife Rebecca, with black eyes and pursed up scornful lips standing haughtily aloof
And my cousins Basha and Miriam and little Nachman clutching at Uncle Zalman's trousers
And their mother, smiling, big-hearted, big-bosomed Aunt Golda, offering me a piece of tart
As I am staring absently sideways
Into the little dark face rimmed lovingly between Uncle
Isaac's coarse hands.

MA

WHAT can she be thinking of —
This gray-haired, dark-faced little woman
With those close-drawn cheeks and humbly lowered eyes,
As she bends over the washtub,
Scrubbing the wet underwear against the wash-board
All morning long!
What can she be thinking of —
In this queerly quiet kitchen,
Dark and small and clean-kept like herself,
As the blown rain whips against the window pane
And swishes into the yard
With a soft, continual splash.
I have an impelling desire to understand her;
To know her and get nearer to her —
This tired-faced woman who is my mother.
I wish I could get into her bowed head
As she bends over the washtub,
And look through her dimmed eyes
And see how things seem to her
After fifty-seven years of life —
Fifty-seven years of the great commonplaces of life:
Childhood, girlhood, wifehood, motherhood;
All but death —
And that too.
Fifty-seven years of sorrowing, rejoicing, despairing,

Over the world's timeless joys and griefs;
Questioning not the scheme
That mostly gave her things to sorrow over,
And despair over
All these years.
After bringing ten children into the world,
In the ordinary, miraculous way;
Nursing them with unwearied breasts,
Working for them with unwearied hands,
Loving them with unwearied patience,
Battling for them
With poverty, death and disease
For thirty years; —
Seeing some of them struggle into manhood;
Seeing some of them struggle into womanhood,
Painfully, joylessly;
And following some of them to their little graves,
In their birthplace across the sea,
Under the Russian birch trees.
And one —
She who was your first born, mother!
She who gave you most joy and most pain —
Seeing her grow up in your barren house,
Like a tall tree from a cleft rock,
Strong and healthy and haughty with beauty,
Hating her humble birth,
Panting for color and joy; —
Seeing her flare out her tumultuous years,
In a brief feverish fire;
Until you followed her too,
Burying half of your heart,
Under a tombstone in Brooklyn.
And all the while,

These thirty-seven years,
Mated with the wreck of a strong man,
The wreck of a great soul,
Broken and humbled by a strange disease,
That lurked in him like an assassin —
Patiently loving, living, bearing with him;
Suffering his pain as your own;
Sharing his weakness and worshipping his strength;
Respecting the tragedy you could not understand.
Woman, woman,
Sublime, simple mother of mine,
Scrubbing away at the washboard
With gnarled, mechanical fingers —
What do you make of all this!
How do you reconcile,
All the purposelessness and fruitlessness and contrariness of things
In that crude mind of yours —
Seeing the faith that cloaked you from the truth,
That explained and arranged and combined,
Systematizing the universe into a well-ordered household
With a Master who saw all and knew all;
Punishing and rewarding in inexplicable ways —
Seeing your old faith cast off and trampled under foot,
Ignored and derided by your own children
As a foolish, baseless fable.
Mother, poor mother of mine,
What can you make of all this,
Scrubbing away at your washboard,
This rainy morning!
What are you thinking about?
I wish I could know;
Are you thinking of her that you lost,

In the full-blown bloom of your hope —
Plucked from your arms,
As you held her down to the bed
Helping the doctor that day;
Do you see her come in through the door,
Quick and abrupt as of old:
Her heavy, masculine step;
Her straight and broad-bosomed figure;
The animal health of her cheeks.
Are you remembering,
Some word that she carelessly dropped;
A certain twist of her neck?
And your dark face darkens;
And your gray head pensively droops;
And your eyes that have wept themselves red,
Glistening with oncoming tears.
Or are you thinking of your husband,
Reeling his way through the years,
Stupefied by his fate —
Falling and rising and falling,
Under the bludgeon of life!
And you remember a Sabbath afternoon
In Kartúshkiya-Beróza,
When the town turned out for a stroll; —
How you walked by his side on the highway,
Proud to be envied of all.
Or are you thinking of me —
Your strange, queer, puzzle of a son;
The poet-changeling of your womb —
Whom you would love but do not know how;
Whom you would hope for but do not know what.
And your heart is sad with apprehension
Knowing not why.

Or are you thinking of the little ones
And your little daily cares:
Those socks that you washed just now —
They are far too torn to be mended;
Or those worn out shreds of underwear
And winter coming. . . .

Here they are back from school
With a loud ring at the door —
“I’ll open it, Ma.”

PORTRAIT

THIS is her picture hanging on the wall,
Above the mantelpiece.
The face is grave
And wistful —
Not like the life —
The eyes are much too moody,
The nose too thin,
The lips too firmly set —
Too pale;
Also the chin and cheeks
Too sharply curved,
Not full enough,
The general impression rather tame.
Always,
When I could see her,
She made me think of some sleek leopardess
Pacing the desert —
Her beauty was so fiercely-fair.
Peculiar though,
She did look somewhat changed —
Wistful and awed,
Just like this picture —
The day she died!

IN THE CIRCULATING LIBRARY: SEWARD PARK

OUTSIDE

It is hot and arid;
And the sun glares down upon the tall tenements;
And the tall tenements glare back into the park;
And the little park lies gasping between them,
Thrusting its parched trees pitifully to the sky —
Inside,
In the oak arm-chairs by the windows,
It is almost cool;
And the drawn green blinds beat back the insistent sun-light
Like long shields;
And the rotating fans sting the air into motion
Like gigantic bees;
And the stacked books stand loosely in their shelves
Leaning lazily against each other —
It is almost cool here in the library,
Cool and absorbingly quiet,
With the intense quiet of a thousand dreams
That oozes out of the books.

A red-haired librarian with starched white cuffs,
Sits at a table marking colored cards,
Red and white and green
With a purple pencil.

I follow her fingers as she writes
Until I am half hypnotized into sleep.

Strange, strange,
How familiar all this is and yet how strange —
The walls and the pictures and the books and the self-absorbed faces about me —
Strange! strange!

There is a boy sitting beside me at the window;
His back bent, his head lowered,
Peering at the book in his hands,
Through rusty, iron-rimmed spectacles —
His ears are outspread and huge;
His little eyes sparkle feverishly behind his thick lenses;
And his brow is knitted intently.

There is a girl standing near by,
With black curly hair and thick drooping lips,
Leaning heavily against the tall shelf as she reads —
Her eyes are gray and restless,
And her lips are passionately a-quiver.

There is a young man standing beside her —
Tall and lanky and long-haired;
Casually scanning the book in his hands;
Looking up from it from time to time,
As if waiting for someone.

What a flood of memories —
My brain is dizzy with them!

A dark girl,
Ill-featured and pimply,

Sits at the table opposite the red-haired librarian;
Her long nose strains upward out of her face;
Her shell-rimmed spectacles rest back against her cheeks
like cart-wheels;
But her eyes shine from under them,
Kindly and sweet,
Like sun-warmed pools.

Strange, strange,
How familiar all this is and yet how strange!

There is a boy and girl talking there together,
Beside that window,
By the gray, dormant radiator —
Half-drawn to her, half afraid of her,
He fidgets nervously with his books,
Looking aside as he speaks to her,
In long jerky sentences —
And her eyes are dark and soft;
And her lips are pale and sweet;
And her chin so prettily pointed. . . .

Ghosts! ghosts!
Ghosts of my old selves and my old loves and my old dreams —
How I know you all. . . .

Boy there,
With the Slavic face and the Jewish soul;
With the stubborn nose and the sensitive mouth —
What are you reading?
Keats or Shelley or Swinburne or Browning —
Which is it now?

Girl,
With the passionate lips and the restless eyes —
Are you reading "The Diary of Marie Bashkirtseff"?
And does your heart ache; and does your soul smart
With pride, ambition and love —
Or are you building here another Lesbos,
For another Sappho?
And you,
With the homely face and the strong sweet smile —
What are you reading,
George Eliot or Emily Brontë?
Or are you dreaming of Georges Sand?
And your heart is secretly pleased,
At the thought of the genius and fame,
That will bring great men to your feet!
And you, poor youth,
Searching the room with those patient eyes —
I know for whom you are here.
She isn't here . . . it is late . . .
Someone who never will come. . . .
Perhaps it is best!

Boy-lover there by the window,
Are you afraid to look at her face,
Lest your eyes be tempted to speak?
And yet —
Is it not sweet to be near her;
To talk to her; to look at her sidewise;
To blush; to stammer unconcernedly,
Art, Economics, Philosophy,
While your lips are a-quiver with love!

Ghosts! ghosts!
Ghosts of my old selves, and my old loves and my old
dreams,
Crowding in through my eyes and my ears,
Until my mind is a haunted house,
Running over with ghosts —
Until I feel myself like a ghost,
Haunting this home of my thoughts.

LAMENTATIONS

In a dingy kitchen
Facing a Ghetto backyard
An old woman is chanting Jeremiah's Lamentations, Quaveringly,
Out of a Hebrew Bible.

The gaslight flares and falls. . . .

This night,
Two thousand years ago,
Jerusalem fell and the Temple was burned.
Tonight
This white-haired Jewess
Sits in her kitchen and chants — by the banks of the Hud son —
The Lament of the Prophet.

The gaslight flares and falls. . . .

Nearby,
Locked in her room,
Her daughter lies on a bed convulsively sobbing.
Her face is dug in the pillows;
Her shoulders heave with her sobs —
The bits of a photograph lie on the dresser. . . .

TIMES SQUARE

AN August day,
The eddying roar of the Square —
Crowds, stores, theatres, tall buildings
Assaulting the senses together —
And suddenly,
The taste of an apple between my teeth
Suffuses my mouth. . . .
Where did it come from? —
Strong and sharp and deliciously sour,
The taste in my mouth —
Where?

I cross the street
And suddenly,
Crowds, stores, theatres, tall buildings,
The blare and the glare of the day
Fade. . . .
October blows through the market-place
In a town of faraway Russia —
The booths are laden with fruit. . . .
A little boy,
Snub-nosed, freckle-faced, plump,
Dressed in a newly-washed jacket,
Stolidly strolls by the booths
Clutching a coin in his fingers —

I know him,
That freckle-faced boy;
I know him.
Proudly he passes the stores of the Row,
Ignoring them all —
Until he reaches at last
The booth of the widow Rebecca:
“What do you want, little darling?”
“Here is a penny;
I want this apple.”
“Take it.”
The tense little fingers uncloset to surrender the penny
And close on a big red apple.
And suddenly,
The taste of an apple between my teeth,
Strong and sharp and deliciously sour,
Suffuses my mouth. . . .

The toot of an automobile,
Insistent, shrill,
Jars me back to the Square.

GHETTO TWILIGHT

AN infinite weariness comes into the faces of the old tenements,

As they stand massed together on the block,
Tall and thoughtfully silent,
In the enveloping twilight.

Pensively,

They eye each other across the street,

Through their dim windows —

With a sad recognizing stare,

Watching the red glow fading in the distance,

At the end of the street,

Behind the black church spires;

Watching the vague sky lowering overhead,

Purple with clouds of colored smoke

From the extinguished sunset;

Watching the tired faces coming home from work,

Like dry-breasted hags

Welcoming their children to their withered arms.

IN THE CHILDREN'S READING ROOM

LITTLE girl,
Dreaming here in the library
Over a volume of romance,
Who can he be —
The Hero of your dreams!

Is he a Knight of old days,
Stout-hearted and strong,
Astride on a steed,
Breast-plated, helmetted, shield-on-arm, lance-in-hand
Charging the world in your name!
Or else —
Does he kneel at your feet even now,
A Boy-Prince,
Blue-eyed, curly-locked,
With ruddy cheeks
And lips as sweet as your own —
Asking the realm of your heart?
Or else,
Who knows?
A King perhaps —
Stern-eyed, royal-browed;
With crown and sceptre and ermine,
Sitting in state by your side! . . .
Or are you tired of unreal reveries,

And mould him in a modern form —
A statesman
With a tongue that wakes a million hearts;
With a pen that guides a million swords —
Leading his country to greatness!
Or an Inventor —
Larger-souled,
Working not only for a single selfish nation,
But for the greater Nation of humanity —
Liberating Labor from toil.
Or else —
(Those eyes are strangely, dimly deep)
A Poet perhaps,
Divine in his love;
Pouring his soul into mad, magnificent poems —
Eternal as time!
Or a Musician
A-thrill with melodies,
Whose passion shall mount into marvels of sound,
And storm your heart — and the world's!
Or a Painter
Who will glorify that brow
And those eyes
And those lips,
For all the world to behold!
Or a Sculptor
With creative, God-like fingers
Moulding flesh out of clay,
Carving beauty out of the struggling marble. . . .
Or else —
Who knows?
Is he sitting here —
Even here in the library,

Across the table —
That little pale-faced boy!

Little boy
With that far-away look of yours —
Sitting here in the library
Over a volume of romance —
Who can she be
The Lady of your dreams? . . .

JEAN

GRAY-EYED
Freckle-faced
Jean —
Snub-nosed
Chubby-cheeked
Golden-haired
Jean,
Little Jean
With her big gray eyes,
Spoke to me to-day:
“ Aren’t you queer!
Why do you look
Into my eyes
So —
What do you see in my eyes? ”
Said I:
“ Little Jean,
Aren’t you queer!
Why do you look
Into my soul
So —
What do you see in my soul? ”

AN OLD PICTURE

FADED and rumpled,
Under a cracked glass cover
In a dirty gilt frame —
It hangs on the kitchen wall
Right over the stove.

A music room;
Twilight;
A young woman sits at a piano playing;
Three little girls behind her,
Accompanying with their voices —
One of them gravely directing.
(The picture is entitled “The Trio.”)
The window of the room opens on a landscape of trees —
A wood or a park.

Once it hung in the parlor,
With a companion piece —
A Spanish girl in a monastery
Confessing to a young priest.
That one was burnt in the stove,
Long since,
After being shattered by a fall.
Now “The Trio” hangs alone.

I remember when I was a child,
And we lived on the fourth floor of a Cherry Street tenement —

I used to get on top of a chair,
A parlor chair, too —
And look through the window of the picture,
Far out,
On the melancholy masses of trees
Waving under the twilight sky,
(I didn't like little girls then — Nor big ones)
Something stirred me as I looked at those trees
And pervaded my spirit. . . .
When mother dusted in the parlor
She always wondered why that chair was so dirty.
Then when I became a long lanky boy,
And didn't have to get on top of a chair —
I was fascinated by the dark-haired little director.
I was reading the Waverly Novels then.
How many day-dreams did I build about her —
Clothed her (and myself)
In all the enchantment I could conjure:
Fought duels for her;
Jousted for her —
What not!
Now I find myself looking at it again,
(It hangs on the kitchen wall
Right over the stove)
Wonderingly,
Trying to understand it.
Who is she;
That young woman sitting at the piano,
Playing so sadly —

I swear she is playing some sad ditty!
Are those three cherub-children hers,
Or just that dark-haired little director —
Or is she a music teacher perhaps,
And those are her pupils. . . .
She has an interesting face,
And beautiful hands —
I wonder why she is watching her fingers so pensively!

ON THE STREET-CAR

WE were alone in the car —
I and her soft, black eyes,
Looking blandly at me from the opposite seat.
The car raced along the tracks, through the wide street,
Past forbidding porches and lit store-windows and dark
cross-streets,
Stopping at some of the corners with a jar.
The rain pattered invisibly on the dewed windows of the car,
Denting them with a thousand tiny drops.
The lamplights quivered past us on their posts
Shimmering through the windows on either side,
Blurred and rayed.
We were alone in the car —
I and her soft black eyes
Wearily vacant,
Soothing me with their vacancy.
I found myself staring into her mild face,
Wistfully,
Seeking for something.
Her lips caressed me with their calm curves;
My eyes cooled themselves on her pale forehead.
Like a long needle
The electric bulb over her seat pierced into my eye-balls —
I lowered my eyes,
Resting them on the green folds of her skirt.

Her hands lay loosely on her lap.
I found myself staring at them,
Envying them with a strange envy.
Something choked downward in my throat —
Fell heavily upon my heart and lay there,
Like some corrosive substance.
My head tipped forward weakly,
A wild wish surged giddily through my brain,
Pulling me and pushing me to speak —
She is a woman;
She will understand. . . .
If I could only sit down beside her,
And hide my face where her hands are lying,
And tell her all, all! . . .
And cry for once —
Cry out all the bitterness of my life,
Cry for all the times that I didn't cry,
Because there was no woman's lap to hide myself in,
No woman's face to bend tenderly over me,
No woman's voice to soothe me softly. . . .
To cry. . . .

The car stopped at the corner with a reverberating jar.
She arranged the green folds of her dress,
Walked up quietly to the platform,
And stepped off into the night.

FROM THE THIRD STORY WINDOW

THIS is our backyard;
Walls and windows and clothes lines
Wherever you look —
See
How the sunlight slants across the topmost bricks,
On the opposite wall
Like a golden triangle;
We don't get much of it here,
So we can appreciate it.
You'd be surprised
How beautiful this place can look,
At night —
With those tiers of windows rising on all sides,
Dark and secretive,
Looking at each other queerly —
As if they knew what was taking place behind the blinds,
But chose to be silent.
When I come home late,
And go searching for my supper on the fire-escape,
(My mother leaves it there)
I like to sit there a while
And look out into the yard.
Sometimes there is a moon
And some stars,
In that square piece of heaven

That the walls cut out.
It's a little piece to have,
But a good enough sample to see —
People are spoiled
Getting the whole sky to look at Every time they choose.
Mondays,
The clothes lines are freighted with wash,
Bridging the yard in long white files.
It's a good night to see it.
The moon can look wonderful through a white bed sheet.
It lights up the clothes lines,
Until each piece of wash seems to clothe a ghost.
Sometimes a wind clambers into the yard
And goes blundering among the wash,
Blowing them into billowy folds,
Twisting them together clumsily.
Even in the daytime,
It's not at all a bad place to look at.
It's true,
We don't see much of sunset here
Or sunrise —
But you can watch that wedge of light
On the top of that wall,
A silver spike in the morning —
Lengthening and broadening and lowering,
Until it reaches the fourth story windows.
(That's the lowest it can go)
And then,
Mellowing into pale gold,
Softer and shorter and higher,
Until it climbs back into the sky
At twilight —

Then the yard is steeped in such melancholy;
Such an absorbing singing sadness;
It makes you think of a fond woman
Bidding a last good-bye to her lover.
It's so infecting.
It oozes into the windows;
It fills every room —
Until the walls and the beds and the tables and chairs,
Just swim in it.
Even the prosaic washtub becomes pensive,
In spite of itself;
You can't escape it. . . .
Of course,
If you want to think of it,
It's a foul place to have your windows open on —
Full of dust and refuse and vermin.
And the air you breathe isn't changed very often,
In this four-walled air tank.
But what of that: —
Poems are not made to live in.

A BED-ROOM INTERIOR

OUT of a half-curtained window
The bed-room peers into the yard,
Three stories below.
The twilight filters through the window
Touching the walls and ceiling and woodwork
(All white)
With moody shadows.
A bed stands against the window —
Stolidly
It rests upon its iron posts,
Lifting its broad brass head
Over pillows and beddings,
A ghastly white.
The other side of the doorway,
Facing the head of the bed,
A tall, panelled closet.
The doors are slightly ajar;
The hem of a petticoat peeps between them.
In the opposite corner,
Cross-wise,
Facing the foot of the bed,
A dresser,
(White as the hem of the petticoat)
Mounting a big, round mirror
In two curved arms.

On top:

Brush, combs, hair-pins;

Boxes of powder and cold cream;

An ivory-framed photograph; —

(The portrait of a young man),

Bronze statuettes.

The mirror of the dresser is covered with a white cloth.

From the opposite wall

The portrait of a young woman gazes into its covered face.

The heavy gilt frame is draped in black crêpe. . . .

A FUNERAL: ITALIAN QUARTER

SOMEONE is dead. . . .

Like an intermittent wail,

The music rises at each corner,

As the band blares out the strain —

Poignantly rises and falls,

Like a sharp-crested wave

Breaking wearily against the stone tenements;

Like the sigh of an invisible sword

Cleaving through the air,

Up and down —

Someone is dead. . . .

Like a row of black beetles

The coaches crawl after the bedecked hearse,

Through the narrow gully of the street, banked by brooding tenements,

Slowly, monotonously filing

Into the boisterous breadth of the Avenue, under the harsh-rumbling Elevated —

The coachmen crack their whips and the horses strain forward;

And the music strikes a shriller, wilder key,

Struggling desperately to assert itself in the multi-mouthed tumult —

Someone is dead. . . .

In the garland-decked hearse he is lying —

In the garland-decked hearse, within the carved casket, Reposing royally.
Yesterday he was a hewer of wood and a carrier of coal,
Bending under his endless burdens on the endless stairs —
Now he is riding in a garland-decked hearse, within a carved casket,
In fine linen — bathed and washed at last —
Guarded by four angels in livery!

CROSS-STREETS

I LOVE to watch them as I pass by them on the street-car —
Rambling away from the Avenue between blocks of tall tenements

That brood over them from both sides,

Like old market women;

Or stealing mysteriously through long low brown-stone blocks at night,

Between trees and porches and lamplights —

Lonely lamplights retreating behind each other on their posts,

Mingling with the stars where the dark street meets the dark
sky;

Or lying resignedly at the bottom of gloomy office-buildings,

Or stately apartment-palaces —

At twilight,

With the last remnants of sunset for a background,

Fading moodily in the sky;

Or at noon,

Spreading lazily between sun-steeped mansions,

Long and wide and warm and bright

Under hot, blue, cloudless skies;

Or at early dawn;

Waking from sleep,

With the red face of sunrise,

Glowing behind the green foliage of a park

Where the street ends!

A CITY PARK

I

TIMIDLY

Against a background of brick tenements
Some trees spread their branches
Skyward.
They are thin and sapless,
They are bent and weary —
Tamed with captivity;
And they huddle behind the fence
Swaying helplessly before the wind,
Forward and backward,
Like a group of panicky deer
Caught in a cage.

II

AT NIGHT

I wonder what they are whispering about,
These lean old trees
With their bent heads
Swaying in the night-wind —
What treacheries are they planning together,
Nudging each other in the dark
With gnarled fingers;
Scowling at the sleeping tenements
From under their great brows
So ominously.

BEFORE THE STORM

LIKE a petulant child
The wind railed in the tree tops,
Tearing aimlessly through the foliage
Pulling plaintively at the twigs,
Shaking the branches,
Fretfully.

Like mothers,
Fondly-indulgent,
The old trees bent their heads
Chidingly, soothingly.

A SUNLIT STREET

THE City lay back in the sunshine
And quivered with pleasure,
Like a woman in the arms of her lover.
Tenderly
The warm, white sunlight kissed her cheeks,
And wound itself about her body,
And clung to her,
Passionately.

In the middle of the street
A dead dog lay,
With blood-shot envious eyes,
A-stare at the sun.

A SUNLIT ROOM

FROM the hot blinded street
The sunshine overflows
Into the whole room.
The curtains hang stiff and taut
As the yellow light sifts through their white lacework
Turning them into gold;
The window-panes sparkle with delight —
Golden are the ivory keys of the piano as the sunshine plays upon them
And its dark mahogany body is a bright red.
Opposite
The chairs stand close against the illumined wall
And sun themselves;
The peacocks spread their tails within the two black panels
And stretch themselves in the sun.
On the marble mantelpiece, over the mock fireplace,
A canary trills in a cage —
In a golden cage burnished with sunshine,
Trills and twitters and hops in the light
As her throat bubbles over with joy.

BY THE WINDOW

(FOR H. R.)

That photograph is not you —
Nor this one;
That profile does not bring into play
The massive oval of your face
Full and firm and long —
Too bad
Cameras cannot reproduce souls
As well as bodies;
But that's the trouble:
Bodies can be reproduced but souls must be interpreted
By poets, painters, actresses,
Like you and me —
That's Art!
I wish I were a painter though;
I would paint you right now,
As you sit there facing me,
In the broad yellow arm chair by the window —
Right now,
With the sunlight streaming eagerly through the panes
Kissing the bent curve of your neck;
Striving to warm the black masses of your hair into gold;
Putting forth passionate arms about the cool green folds of your dress,

As if to embrace you —
With the whole Park lying behind you for a background
Ten stories below —
The Park with its trees and the vast circumference of the Reservoir in the center,
Sparkling in the sun,
Like a round blue shield of steel;
And afar,
The length of the City stretching on the other side of the Park —
A long straight line of mansions zig-zagged into the clear
sky
So sharply — so minutely visible,
One would think it to be an architect's model
Or a toy-city made out of blocks.
That would be a background for you
After Zuloaga's own heart —
Only I doubt if Zuloaga could have painted that smile:
Vast, omniscient, contemplative,
Yet bright and wholesome as the sunshine
And sweetly playful,
That floods me from your calm face,
Zuloaga's portraits do not smile that way.
Somebody else would have to do it
And soften into depth
The firmness of that mouth and the fixity of those eyes —
Even as Spring softens the outlines of these trees below.
Otherwise you would be merely beautiful;
A "Greek Goddess" as the dramatic critic calls you —
I don't agree with him — at least I don't want to,
Being a Jew.
I prefer Christ to Plato any time;
Mary Magdalene rather than Helen —

Even Salome.

I always think of Greece as being soulless:

A beautiful youth playing in the sun,

Carelessly happy,

Taking and giving love lightly —

So I would prefer to see you as a Jewess,

Pale,

Chastened with sorrow as the Magdalene;

Or primevally, orientally passionate as Salome —

“Give me the head of Jokahnaan!”

I surely would have given it to you if I were Herod,

And thought it well worth the price

To see the Dance of the Seven Veils danced by you.

I would rather see you as a Magdalene though —

You are far too tall for Salome;

Too royal looking to play the part of a wild-cat or a tigress.

Magdalene would suit you much better:

A big-souled, big-bodied woman who has sinned greatly

And suffered greatly,

And capable of great repentance.

I can see you as the Magdalene

Washing the feet of Jesus —

On your knees;

Your eyes lowered but without shame —

Washing them with those large soft hands,

And drying them with the thick black coils of your hair;

And I can see Jesus looking down upon you

Filled with a greater awe than yours,

Worshipping you as you are worshipping Him!

The Magdalene would suit you much better I think;

Have you ever played it —

I wonder!

THE HILL-PATH

(FOR E. R.)

TRUE,

We could walk up the hills —

One can see ever so much more from there I suppose.

The Bay must look lovely now,

With a thousand little waves lapping this yellow light,

As the grass here on the hillside.

I love afternoon sunlight

Striking grass or water or windowed city-streets

Such a soft, pale, melancholy gold.

Only isn't it much easier walking here?

Sometimes I am almost satisfied with looking at hills,

Instead of climbing them to look down

As one should.

Hills are so uncertain;

Always beautiful to look up to but not always beautiful to look down from —

There are so many things one can see from them —

This City, for instance,

On the other side of the Bay,

With its factories and tenements

Skulking back of the piled-up pinnacles on the waterfront;

Here,

You can look up to them,

But not through them —

I am afraid I am getting symbolical;
I feel that way,
Walking in Staten Island beside you,
Who wants to go up the hills —
These low-browed docile hills —
You!
Who have climbed the mountains,
With Ibsen, Strindberg, Hauptmann,
And all the Titan thinkers of your age.—
And looked down with them,
Into the dizzy abysses of life —
Yourself a mountain-peak of Art!
Yes,
When I look at your big form,
Broad-shouldered and generously rounded,
With the wide jaws narrowing to a sparsely-covered head;
And those eyes,
Firm and keen and greyish,
Nestling back of that eagle nose
Like eaglets —
Eyes that have looked on so much from their perch!
I think you are yourself a mountain
Of piled-up hopes, dreams, triumphs of the past,
That one must scale to understand.
It's easier though to look up than to climb up,
And it may not be beautiful from the top
Looking down —
Still . . .
I'll climb with you
And take my chance on the view.
Whatever it may be upon the surface,
If one but looks deep enough into truth,
It is always beautiful.

That's Realism I take it —
You ought to know,
Being Arch-Realist of your age.
(I love your phrase:
"Realism is but a broom, Clearing the stage for a deeper Romanticism.")
So let's go up the hills,
Where one can see far and clear and deep,
Tower and tenement and ocean and river and bay,
And Liberty lifting her torch from the Bay
To light up the sky for our eyes.
It's getting darker —
Soon she will be lit up,
And rise from the water, resplendently tall,
A statue of silver and gold.
I like her much better now
With that lonely star
Glittering there by her wrist —
Be careful where you walk —
Look at that muddy pool,
With its deep-sunken filmy eye,
Staring out of the side of the hill,
As if someone lay drowned there.
The trees step back from it
Avoiding it as they climb the hill —
It's peculiar,
How the trees seem to climb with you laboriously
When you ascend a wooded slope,
And step down with you,
Slowly and carefully,
As if they feared to lose their footing.
Here we are at the top
At last!

SOLILOQUY OF A REALIST

QUEER —

How that picture bothers me!

I can't get it out of my mind:

That tall-columned portico by the blue Aegean,

With the sea framed between the two columns,

And the young witch bending there over the glass hemisphere on the tripod,

Watching the reflection of a sail

On the horizon's edge.

"Circe's Palace" it's called;

I think she has bewitched me too —

Not she so much as that portico of hers,

With its mysteriously-majestic Ionic pillars,

Like marble oak trunks rising.

Every time I think of them my mind slips loose,

And sails off into a sea of vague desires

For beautiful unreal things.

Pictures form in my mind

Of such fantastic loveliness:

Secluded oak groves where the wind whispers fearful oracles through the trees —

While black-robed priests dance together in the moonlight

And gash themselves with flashing knives;

Dark lakes a-shimmer with the limbs of bathing goddesses;

Vast deserted palaces

With labyrinthine corridors and long silent halls
Where footsteps echo forever;
Cities built to music,
Whose streets are susurras of song —
It's so tempting to let yourself go
And just drift away from reality —
Far away;
From tenements and fire-escapes and backyards;
From squalor and poverty and pettiness —
Only it's such a hard job coming back!
The more I think of marble palaces the less I like to look at these tenements;
The more I wander through moonlit oak groves the less I like to pick my way through these pushcarts;
And those creatures there —
Swarming busily in and out of this filth,
Satisfied to live and to breed,
Like fleas on a carcass —
I hate to think I am one of them.
Ah!
How different those great white symbolic-looking columns are —
Speaking and singing of beauty and mystery and Greece!
Of days and years and lives of perfect joy,
Lived like poems in rhythm.
But then;
Aren't there different kinds of poetry?
The kind that I have been preaching to myself all these years —
Where does that come in:
"The Beauty of the Commonplace"; "The Miracle of the Everyday"; "The Universality of Art"?
Are these just phrases?

I am ashamed of myself —
I, I who have taken Art to myself for lawful wife;
I who have known her body and soul
In the common intimacies of wedlock —
To be talking like a silly lover,
Serenading the lady of the moon.
Isn't sunlight on those rusty fire-escapes a deeper gold;
Something more than mere sunlight,—the very soul of things
Coaxed out of the iron?
Is that ugly?
That dreamy-eyed little ragamuffin urinating so contempla-tively on the pavement,
Patterning that square patch of sunlight into circles and ellipses
With such intense absorption —
Or is it — what? . . .
Everywhere, always, if one but look;
If one but tear the callous crust off one's eyes and let life shine through —
Life always is Beauty and Beauty is Life —
Keats said very much the same thing if I remember;
Only there isn't much trace of it in his poetry.
Well,
I don't blame you, John Keats.
Some people don't care to strain their eyes that way.
You need steeled sight;
An obstinacy of vision that melts the hard edge of things like compressed fire
And fuses them into beauty.
It's so much easier to make it up yourself,
Out of yourself —
Rather than to wrest it out of stubborn facts.

Of course,
There is a recompense for the harder work;
A higher beauty, a deeper truth —
I like to think so.
But sometimes —
Sometimes I weary of it so!
The adjusting and reconciling and harmonizing of shrieking dissonances.
Something fails in me;
And Reality breaks through like a jagged rock,
Coarse and hard and merciless.
The streets cut through me and narrow me into squalid alleys;
The tenements crowd into and divide my mind into little dingy rooms;
And people walk up and down through me with unheeding feet
And wear me into shallow ruts,
And trample the delicacy out of my innermost self.
Then I want to divest myself of Reality as of a dirty shirt,
To give up the dingy rooms and squalid alleys of my soul;
And retreat into a world of my own making —
Deep, deep within;
Far, far away —
Yet so familiarly my own.
A world by the blue sea, framed between Ionic columns;
Where there are no stunting tenements, no narrowing streets,
no pettifying cares.
A world of trees and temples, peopled by immortal youths
Whose duty is but to live beautifully all their lives;
And be initiated into pagan mysteries day by day,
By the skies and the seas and the winds and the trees;
By the sun and the moon and the stars and the flowers

And the subtle-sensed bodies of women and men. . . .
But that doesn't last long,
And proves:
Merely that poets are too lazy to live and think at the same time;
So they take a vacation from life.
I have come to this after much thinking:
Beauty, rhythm, harmony, and so forth —
These are but the garments that life tries to cover herself with,
As artists hide themselves behind poems, pictures, sonatas.
Only through rifts in the beauty, through breaks in the rhythm, can one see her wonderful, dissonant soul —
(Tragedy or comedy we call it when that happens)
Therefore a good motto might be:
One needs a keen ear for dissonance to be an artist.

PASTEL: FROM THE WILLIAMSBURGH BRIDGE

SUBTLY, swiftly, mysteriously,
Like the memory of some wonderful dream,
The sunset fades out of the emblazoned west —
Sinking behind the massed tower-peaks of Manhattan,
Lower, and fainter and further.
The grey sky darkens overhead,
Turning into pale green;
Deepening
Darker and darker and darker —
Until it is one vast canopy of blue,
Glowing with a soft satiny sheen.
A purple haze gathers in the air,
Expanding slowly;
Settles on the river and on the bridges and on the roof tops,
Downward,
Like a cloud of colored smoke —
Smoothing out their harsh outlines;
Harmonizing them into dark masses.
One after another,
Like the points of diamond needles,
The stars pierce through the blue canopy of the sky;
The lights of the city come out to meet them,
Sparkling more brilliantly as the haze deepens —

Clustering around the vague outlines of the buildings;
Like fireflies;
Crowning the tall heads of the towers
Like tiaras;
Stretching in gold chains across the river
On either side of the bridgeways.
Dimly gigantic
Like the trunks of headless Titans
The bridge towers rise from the river bed —
Steel-limbed and stone-footed
Standing astride the bridge.
The river flows between them,
Under the curving sweep of the bridges,
Against the clustering lights of the wharves —
Heavy and sluggish with darkness,
Like a black marsh.

THE FIRE-GARDEN

"I'M just going down the cellar
To throw a few shovelfuls of coal into the furnace —
Will you come along?
I think the fire is low."
He flung the door back
Flooding the cellar with yellow light
From the gas-lit kitchen.
"Yes,
Let's go down;
It's always good to be on the safe side before going to bed,
And it's going to be a cold night."
The stairs creaked under our feet as we stepped carefully down.
"You can shut the door behind you;
There is a light there in the corner,
I'll just turn it on a little more."
The little ball of fire burning out of the gas-tip
Lengthened into a thin long jet,
Stabbing into the blackness like a knife-blade.
A faint draft coming from somewhere in the cellar
Wrestled with it for a while,
Blowing it backward and forward.
"Haven't you ever been in our cellar before?"
He opened the furnace door.
I stepped back,

Tense and thrilled —
(You feel that way in a theatre
When the curtain lifts suddenly over the footlights.)
“ Well, that’s splendid! ”
Like a garden of fiery flowers
(Staged in a theatre or painted on a panel)
The red mouth of the furnace glowed in the darkness —
Red and white and gold and blue,
A hundred little flames frisked about it like elves,
Nodding with their forked heads,
Tumbling over each other lightly,
Swaying in a rhythmic dance.
“ It’s a shame to spoil this thing;
Don’t throw any coal on the fire now —
You’ll choke it.”
“ Oh, it’ll be all right in a moment —
Fire must be fed, you know.”
As he spoke
He thrust his shovel into the coal;
The coals came clattering down from the top of the heap.
“ I wonder whether they heard it? ”
“ Who? ”
“ The dancers.”
“ It hasn’t interrupted the dance any.”
He lifted a shovelful of coal
And swung it heavily into the furnace —
The fire went out under the black mass
As if under a blow;
The garden withered into pale smoke;
The dancers disappeared suddenly.
Then another shovelful;
Then another —
“ Oh, you’ve choked it all up! ”

“It’ll be all right in a moment;
See —”
Slowly,
Regaining consciousness,
Blue tongues of flame clambered out of the coals —
Darting here and there
As if looking for something;
Meeting together;
Joining hands joyfully —
Then red, then white, then gold,
And the whole furnace was aglare again.
“There’s your dance again
Going on as merrily as before —
Come,
Let’s close the furnace
And leave them;
There’s enough coal there
To keep the dance going all night —
Did you ever read Poe’s ‘Masque of the Red Death’?”
“Yes; why?”
“I was just thinking about it.”
He closed the furnace door with a bang.

I went to bed that night
With the furnace glowing red in my brain,
As it glowed there in the cellar
Within its iron heart.
Half thinking, half dreaming,
I thought of the dancers dancing all night
Among the fiery flowers of the furnace
Unseen, unheard.
I wondered whether they were really happy
Dancing all night;

Or whether they just pretended —
I thought of the coals dying of their own fire,
And wondered.
When I fell asleep
I dreamt that I was sitting in a theatre,
Vast and dark and empty —
Watching the performance of a mystic play,
Going on interminably, invisibly,
Behind the luminous curtain of the stage.

ON THE BRIDGE

A-CLARE with electric lights,
Like a great, luminous bug,
The car crawled through the steel meshes of the bridge-
way —

Carrying its unheeding passengers with it through the night,
As if on some mysterious errand.

The passengers packed it to the doors;
Squeezed between each other on the benches on both sides;
Holding to the worn leather straps over the benches;
Pressed against each other in the aisle.

The air was heavy with their breath.
Three girls in shabby red coats stood chattering together;
Gossiping about the foreman and the new designer of their shop.

A dark, slight girl and a spectacled young man stood un-comfortably face to face —

Their bodies crushed closely together;
Their eyes evading each other bashfully.

A bearded, round-faced man sat reading a newspaper
With square Hebrew print.

The car quickened its motion imperceptibly.

Two college boys sat talking together;
Comparing notes carefully on the last biology lecture.

A pale tired-faced girl sat beside them reading
Some yellow-covered novel by Turgenev.

Next to her was a stout girl with a millinery box on her knees;

A young man leaned over her on a strap,
Staring hungrily into her bulging bosom
Through her unbuttoned coat and low shirtwaist. . . .
Over her head,
Through a clean space in the window,
The night sparkled like a crown —
River and city and sky,
Set with a million jewels.

FROM THE JERSEY BANK

WEARILY,
The River stretches its broad breast,
Northward and southward,
Dozing between its banks.
Ferries,
Lone-funneled and ugly
Furrow its blue surface constantly —
Sending up black streamers of smoke against the hazy sky
Glowing with the last colours of the sunset.
Tug-boats
With engines incessantly clicking,
Ply busily up and down —
Dragging the long, heavy barges behind them.
Occasionally
Stately liners pass royally among them,
Three-funneled and huge,
Challenging the tall towers on the opposite shore. . . .
But the River ignores them all,
Flowing slowly between the tall towers on one side and the tall crags on the other —
Slowly, moodily, reluctantly,
Into the far-off, inevitable Sea.

NOVEMBER

I

FEARLESSLY,
They thrust their dry branches against the sky;
Long since the wind rifled their blossoms
And scattered their foliage on the ground —
Now they stand sternly erect,
Naked and strong,
Having nothing to lose.

II

They strew the ground,
Drifting into long, shallow banks,
Piling into deep red mounds,
Eddying under the trees —
Aimlessly —
Long since the wind wilted them with its breath
And tore them from their twigs —
Now they are free,
Having no need to grow.

THE NEUROLOGICAL INSTITUTE

I

A TALL, red narrow-chested building,
Anaemic-looking and old;
It lifts its steepled head above the block,
Fearful of its own height.

II

A line,
Men, women, children,
(Alas for humanity!)
All in their Sunday best,
Hiding a hundred ailments under their clothes —
Pushing and jostling and shuffling,
Wait for the doors to open.

III

First shall be last and last shall be first'—
If you fellows would only read your Bible,
For one thing you wouldn't be pushing like that.
Look at me:
I'm not pushing,
But you'll see who'll be treated first.
Old man? . . .
Who's an old man?
You wouldn't take me to be over thirty, would you?
You better not.
Maybe you think I'm going here because I'm sick?

Certainly not;
This place happens to be an hour's walk from my house,
So I take a walk here every Wednesday.
Don't be talking so much against the rich people, young fellow,
I'm one of them;
It's beastly cold, though;
Left my overcoat behind, by a mistake, you know."

IV

A nurse appears in the hall
The doors swing open.

V

Baldheaded and clean-shaven,
With folds of cheek and chin
Like a well-washed hog,
He sits behind the railing,
(How many years?)
Quavering solemnly:
"What is your name?
Are you willing to pay one dollar for your examination?
Where were you born?
How old are you? "
His face has set into a questioning stare,
Eyes, ears, mouth,
Interrogatively wide.

VI

She sits beside him
Filling the cards out,
Collecting the money from the patients,
Snapping alternately:

"Find yourself a seat,
Doctor or treatment?
Find yourself a seat."
Her face is dried and hollowed,
Her lips are thin and bloodless,
Her voice is like the crackling of briars.

VII

A steam-heated hot-house
With souls instead of plants,
On rows of chairs.
If all the pain upon those chairs would speak!
If all the souls within this room were bared!

VIII

School-marm turned nurse,
Pretty and conscious of it.
She bosses the patients about like little children,
Seating them here and there,
Calling them constantly to order:
"Look here, you,
I want you to stop talking;
Find yourself a seat —
There are plenty of chairs in the back;
Heavens, what a chatterbox!
Can't you, please, stop talking?"
She's pretty, though
From the tip of her shoe to the top of her cap,
Face and figure perfect.

IX

How strange she seems
Standing there by her desk,

Tall and well-formed
Like a stately poplar,
Amid a tropic swamp.

X

If those lips were mine to kiss
And that hair were mine to touch,
And those breasts were mine to crush
For one wild moment —
I could half forget the pain
That walls me out from Life.

XI

From the steaming jaws of hell,
Clear and sweet and sudden,
A child's treble:
"Mamma,
Why does that man wear that black thing over his eyes?
Can he see through it?
Look, mamma,
When I'll be a big boy
Then could I walk then,
Like when we used to live in Brooklyn?
Yes, Mamma?
Then I could go in a shop
And make ten dollars a week,
Like papa.
Wouldn't you be glad if I make ten dollars a week?
I'm tired, Mamma,
Why doesn't the doctor take us in?
Maybe he isn't here?
Where does the doctor live?
Does he live here?

Mamma,
Come home;
I want to go home,
Come

XII

A face framed in black curls,
Restless roaming eyes
Under a bulging brow,
Deep set;—
He stabs me with his beauty,
That little boy.
His mother holds him in her arms,
Listening to his querulous prattling,
Blandly, indifferently;
From time to time
Chiding him in a low voice,
Readjusting his fretful body on her lap.
Her face is like moulded wax.

XIII

Rembrandt Van Rijn,
God's photographer,
Artist-in-ordinary to His Majesty, Life,
He would have painted them well:
This "Mother and Child."
Painted them just as they sit there
With all this crowded clinic for a background,
He would have called it with divine simplicity:
"A Woman holding a Boy on Her Lap."

XIV

"Charity,
That's what they call charity.

First they keep you shiverin' two hours outside,
Then they keep you chokin' two hours here.
Look at that woman.
Is it her fault that her child's paralyzed?
Is it her fault that she hasn't got no money?
I'll tell you what,
If she had money she wouldn't be waitin' here like that —
With that kid in her arms, too.
I don't care about myself, I tell you.
I got the Fits —
Epilepsy they call it;
Got it ten years;
But I don't give a damn about myself —
It's the kid —
Why should the kid have tha' mis'ry?
It ain't done anybody no harm;
There's somethin' wrong, I tell you."

XV

A big muscular-looking man of about forty,
Long-faced and weather-beaten,
With fierce, gray eyes.
Epilepsy!
So, he's got epilepsy.
He might as well have told me:
"I am the crater of Mt. Vesuvius, Got the Eruptions, you know."

XVI

"Been going here long?
First time, eh?
Well, you'll see
A bunch of fakers.

They ain't know nothin'—nothin' about me leastways,
Give me some dope for my nerves!
I ain't nervous —
I drive the craziest hunks o' horseflesh in the town.
Couldn't drive 'em a block, if I was nervous.
I know what I got it from —
Got it from goin' with the women too much,
But what the hell!
I ain't gonna' begin to go to Sunday School now,
Too old a buck.
I was born from the women so I'll die from the women.
Whaddya' say?
There goes my name —
Yes, doctor —
Good-bye, young un."

XVII

On the nurse's desk
The telephone rings;
She drops her work.
"Hello,
Who is that?
Oh, is that you, Paul?
I had forgotten all about you.
What are you doing with yourself?
Oh!
Listen, Paul,
I've heard strange rumors about you. . . .
Yes, strange rumors.
Somebody told somebody else that you're going to marry somebody.
You heard what I said, alright.
Well, I'm sort of curious to know. . . .

Who?
Me?
What do you mean by saying that to me?
I have half a mind to drop the receiver right now. . . .
No!
Can't see you to-night.
Yes, to punish you. . . .
It all depends.
I'll see how you behave. . . .
Flatterer!
I said you were a flatterer.
No.
Because I don't want to.
Did you really get the tickets already?
I don't believe you. . . .
What's playing?
It's your luck it's 'Lohengrin.'
Listen, Paul, I'm dreadfully busy.
Call me up a little later,
About five.
Yes.
Good-bye.
Don't be silly!
I said you were a silly boy.
Good-bye."

XVIII

She picks up her work:
Filing some "histories"
Looking some up in the catalogue.
Paul!
I wonder who he is,
Some healthy young male,

Tall and good-looking
With a good-looking income
Or prospect of such.
Paul,
If you could make those cheeks rosier,
And those eyes brighter,
And those hands nervous,
I envy you, Paul!

XIX

So, he's my fellow patient —
That idiot boy there,
Staring at me with his huge glassy eyes,
Half vacantly, half recollectively,
Then bursting into a loud chuckle.
It's he.

XX

He lives across the clothes-lines
On the third floor of the opposite tenement,
Forming the rear of our yard.
All day long the yard resounds with him —
Either laughing like a satyr
Or braying like an animal in pain.
He's about fifteen,
Dark and hatchet-faced,
With a moustache sprouting under his snout-like nose.
His mouth is open as he stares at me,
Showing two rows of teeth.
Disgustingly foul.

XXI

A girl enters the room
And seats herself down in a chair,

Just in front of my own.
I caught a glimpse of her face
As she turned to look at the clock,
And the warmth of her big black eyes,
And the delicate curve of her nose,
Stabbed through my head like a knife.

XXII

I remember a January afternoon,
Cold and wet and foggy,
When we strolled through the snow-covered Park.
Her arm was tight in my own
As we strolled through the ghastly lawns.
“Look,
Isn’t it wonderful?”
“Yes,” I answered,
Looking aside at her face.
“Do you know,
I love the Park in Winter.”
“Yes,” I trembled,
Tightening her arm in my own,
I remember a January afternoon,
Cold and wet and foggy.
This was my June.

XXIII

I am tired of waiting.
Life’s the waiting-room of a clinic
And I suppose the doctor is Death,
And the grave must be behind the little door marked “Private.”
I think I’m going to faint;
My head swims. . . .

A baby tumbles from her mother's arms,
On the hard, stone floor —
God!

The white door of the little room marked "Private" opens;
A man in a black suit comes out;
My name is called!

XXIV

"What's your complaint?
Pains in the back of your head?
My dear boy, how do you know it's terrific?
Don't sleep, eh?
Is that so?
Anything been happening to worry you lately,
Any affairs of yours gone wrong?
Been jilted by your sweetheart, perhaps?
Nothing of that, eh?
Let's examine your heart;
Open your shirt up,
Way up.
More!
Your heart's all right.
Are you leading a normal life?
How about your appetite?
Is that so?
Take these pills four times a day,
After every meal and at bedtime;
There's nothing the matter with you —
Nothing organic, that is,
Just functional nervousness.
You'll be alright,
Good-bye."

TO-DAY

TO-DAY

The wind goes sighing through the streets;
Prowling stealthily into each open door;
Tapping at the windows;
Like a maniac,
Searching, searching —
For what it knows not!

To-day

My soul goes sighing through my heart;
Prowling into old familiar corners;
Treading long-forsaken byways
And looking backward
Fearfully —

Why?

THE FIDDLER

Like Nero of old
I sit amid the ruins of my life,
Fiddling in tune
While my soul is on fire —

Poet! Poet! Poet!
Incorrigible Poet!

CROWDS

CROWDS!

I am shy —

Yet I love crowds —

I love to plunge into a crowd as a swimmer plunges into the sea;

I love to feel against my ribs the rough pressure of life;

I love to push and be carried along with the tide —

I love the rude shoulders of men.

Crowds!

I am a dreamer —

Yet I love crowds —

I love to hear in my soul the rhythmic jar of existence;

Only in the crush of the mart can I build my dreams;

Only in the noise of the street can I find my songs —

I love the harsh voices of men.

Crowds!

I love crowds —

Yet in the midst of them,

I am lonely.

GROTESQUE

CLEAVING

The darkness of the night
Two spires shoot upward;
Two spires of fretted stone.
Behind them
The long gray body of the great Cathedral
Squats like a Beast.

There is something threatening in your strength;
There is something sinister about your strange magnifidence —

Grim, gray Beast!
Is it the ghost of dead Faith still haunting me?
Is it the power of old spells still binding me?
I have seen you standing strong
Under the high stars,
And revelled in your might.
I have seen you rising
Coldly — clear
Under the cold moon,
And worshipped your beauty.
Tonight
This beauty is an apparition
Challenging me,
Maddening me,
Defying my soul with its strength.

Ah, that I could take you in my hands and break you between my palms,
Great Beast!
With the vehemence of my hate
Encircle my arms about you and crush you in my embrace.
How stolid you stand! —
How insolently calm,
Buttressed with strong, stupid masses of stone,
And strong, stupid masses of soul,
Tauntingly, flauntingly firm —
Beast! Beast! Beast!
Gray-coated Leprosy,
Charnel-house,
Urinal,
Carved for the worship of God
Where big-bellied Bishops and Cardinals
Empty themselves of their lies. . . .
Avaunt!
How filthy you are
With putrid odors;
The stench of decayed superstitions reeks from your haunches.
Hypocrisy shines on your face like a bloated boil
Ripe for the scalpel —
Ah!
If I could only prick that boil with the point of my pen
And squeeze out the pus with some forceps
Exposing the sore,
That all the world might see it
Even as I —
How loathsome you are!
The poisonous breath of your mouth corrupts the air
Like a pestilence.
I choke,

I faint with its fumes,
I fall, fall, fall —
Endlessly,
Into the torpor of death,
Into the horror of hell —
Endlessly. . . .
Beast! Beast! Beast!
Gray Beast with the ravenous maw
Devouring my soul,
Avaunt — Avaunt!

A CLUMP OF PINES: MOUNT MORRIS PARK

LIKE swarthy young gods
The pines rise from the sloped forehead of the hill;
Looking upward over its bald top
Into the downward curving sky
That frames it in a blue infinity.
Behind them
The trees straggle up the hillside
With naked branches waiting to be budded —
Impatient of Spring.
Wantonly,
The birches spread their white limbs in the sunshine;
The poplars sway with tender passion;
The young oaks stand taut with desire.
Behind them
The lawns lie bellied out under the sunshine —
Each faded grass-blade impregnated with new life.
Children play on the walks.
Full-bosomed young mothers
With moist breasts crushed under their coats
Sit on the benches beside the baby-carriages.
At the bottom
The City spreads like a besieging army,
Petrified into massed blocks — manacled by long streets
As it surged forward.

The houses glare impotently at the hill
Out of their sun-dazzled eyes.
The churches lift up their steeples among them like standards.
But the pines rise in their fenced copse on the hill-side
Solemnly apart —
Over the massed houses and challenging steeples;
Over the warm placid lawns and restless spring-stirred trees;
Standing as in a sacred grove,
And looking fixedly over the hill
Into the infinite abysmal blue.

ON A PARK BENCH

UNDER the green-bosomed chestnuts bulging into the driveway

She sat there —

Big-bodied and immobile as the trees;

Ripening in the warm insinuating sunshine

Like a huge plant.

Feverishly

The automobiles hurried after each other before her vacant unheeding eyes —

Sparkling into view like sudden suns

And darkening out of sight.

Like a moving tapestry

The equestrians swept after each other across the drive —

Shining brown haunches, polished black boots gleaming through the leaves.

The birds darted through the sunlight like fishes

Riddling it with a million melodious trills.

She sat there

Rooted to the bench,

Feeling only the bulging mystery in her womb,

Dull-eyed and grandly immobile,

Growing with the green lawns and the silent sap-veined trees.

THE PLAY POND: CENTRAL PARK

UNDER the dazzling sweep of sun-burnished blue skies
The pond blinks between the recumbent hills,
Rippling ceaselessly away
From the whirlpool of white fire
Flaming on the further side.
Saturated with light
The trees climb down the bent backs of the hills
With drooping heads and faint limbs —
Pale from the weariless lust of the sun
Like raped women.
Out of its great round eye
The pond gapes piteously at the trees.
Like a quarry seeking shelter,
In frantic ripples
It scurries under the explosive, blinding sparkle
Groping at its planked rim,
With little lapping tongues —
But the trees are far and helpless
Ravished with sunlight
And the hot, hard planks are merciless as the sun.
Nearby
Across the scorched backs of the hills
The mansions sit back comfortably on the broad sidewalk of the Avenue —
With well-shaded eyes

Watching the tortured pond struggling under the glare
Like a pinned butterfly.
On the green benches ranged around the pond
Women sit in white groups —
Reading, knitting;
With lowered eyelids
Evading the blazing pond.

Beside the rim of the pond
A red-haired little boy squats on his brown chubby hands
With eager lips and unblinking blue eyes,
Watching a wilful breeze driving his toy schooner,
Against the feverish ripples fleeing from the fire —
Cruelly, swiftly,
Into the heart of the flaming whirlpool.

THE DESERTED CHURCH

It has stood that way for years,
Awesomely empty —
A flat-roofed lumbering structure in the shape of a half cross,
Jutting out of the block at the corner of two busy avenues;
The long head of the cross stretching towards the street
With a sign on the door telling passers-by it is for sale;
The two arms receding awkwardly into the block.
Weed-covered grounds —
One boasting of a tree —
Flank the long head of the cross
On either side.
Windows,
Tall, narrow slits
With broken panes and curved tops,
Stare gravely into the ground like owls —
The building stands there like a tomb
Deserted of its God.

I pass it sometimes on my way to the library,
At night
When gray clouds sail over its flat roof like shrouded souls,
And the yellow moon shines down from among the clouds,
On its bare, brown walls,
Through its tall, dilapidated windows,
On the gaunt spare-branched tree.

Then I am almost afraid of it —
I am afraid of the God that is haunting His old home. . . .
If I were bold enough to climb over that fence
And steal up close to one of those windows,
And look through its broken panes —
I think I would see Him sweeping up and down the chancel,
Seeking vainly for His old worshippers,
Listening vainly for the blessed sound of the Mass,
Forever hushed —
Yes,
God's ghost is haunting this gloomy church —
I am afraid of it!

Soon,
An enterprising Jew will buy up the property,
And turn it into a moving-picture house —
(Jews are not afraid of God because they created Him.)
“The Vitagraph Palace” or “The Art Motion Pictures” or “The Lee Avenue Theatre” or some other name
Will glare in electric letters over the door;
Signs and posters all around the building will tell the public what is playing.
At night,
Sweethearts from the cosmopolitan neighborhood will sit together in the aisles,
Playing secretly with each other's hands in the dark,
Flirting together in a dozen different languages,
While the hero and heroine make love to each other on the screen,
Where once the altar stood.
Gayety and pleasure shall crowd into every nook of the church,
And God's ghost shall be driven out.

MY BELOVÉD

At night
When I am asleep,
My Belovéd comes to me
And falls upon my breast
And caresses me —
Calls me her Poet, her Artist, her Soul;
Calls me her Genius, her Saviour, her God —
I crush her in my arms
And kiss her
And bite her
Amorously —
I may not hint at half the joy we have;
I may not tell of half the love we share;
At night!

In the daytime
I sit beside her,
Sometimes,
And talk to her
Bashfully
About all sorts of things —
Literature, Art, Philosophy
She listens,
Sometimes —
I am a very queer fellow
She thinks.

A BROOKLYN BY-STREET

Two straight rows of low brick buildings —
Interminably red, interminably neat, interminably double-storied;
Fronted with the same brown porches and the same small grass plots,
Stare at each other across the street,
Placidly,
Out of a hundred windows.
Automobiles
Race between them intermittently;
Delivery-wagons
Rattle by from the markets
Stopping at some of the porches;
A boy alights from a wagon
Carrying a parcel —
He is tall and freckle-faced —
A girl in a white dress is sitting on one of the porches,
Reading a yellow-bound book. . . .
I wonder what she is reading —
A story or an essay or a poem,
A novel or a play!
I think she is reading a poem:
Her eyes are so open and restless,
Her lips are so languidly pensive —
I am sure she is reading a poem.

If I wanted
 I could walk up that porch and speak to her.
 I know
 She wouldn't mind it.
 I would walk up those steps and say to her, smilingly:
 "Pardon me . . . but . . .
 May I ask you —
 What are you reading? "
 (I can almost see her,
 Lifting her face from the book,
 Startled somewhat!)
 "Some poetry. . . . Swinburne's . . . . my favorite."
 "Mine, too."
 "Do you like him? "
 "I love him;
 He's a wonderful wizard of words! "
 And . . .
 "Did you read his 'Garden of Proserpine'? "
 "I was reading it now for the twentieth time —
 I'm crazy about it! "
 And . . .
 "Did you read them? —
 Laus Veneris, Dolores, Fragoletta, Faustine, Anactoria, Hertha, Aholibah, Thalassius? "
 "All! "
 "What marvellous word-woven tapestries all;
 What palaces builded of sound,
 Oriental, Ionic and Gothic;
 In color, melody, rhythm,
 In power and passion of words,
 There's no one like Swinburne! "
 And . . .
 "Do you remember the opening chorus

In 'Atalanta in Calydon' ?
A Greek might have written it — (Apologetically)
You see,
I know these things
Being a poet myself —"
"A poet!
You? "
And . . .
If I wanted
I could walk up those steps and speak to her
All this and much more . . .
But something
Out of a hundred hooded windows
Staring complacently —
Cowers me and drives me away
Abashed.

I wonder what she is reading! . . .

NOCTURNE: FIFTH AVENUE AND CENTRAL PARK

THE omnibus moved joltingly up the Avenue
Double-storied and top-heavy;
Shaking the drowsy passengers on the roof,
Sideward and forward.
The sky curved over us like a dim dome,
Moonless and murky,
Indefinitely deep.
A few stars struggled out of the thick mists
And followed us.
On one side slept the Park —
A long, black mass of trees,
Facing the Avenue and melting backward into the blacker
sky.
On the other side stretched the white mansions of the Avenue,
With blinds pulled down and curtains drawn close,
Big and empty looking.
The omnibus moved joltingly up the Avenue.
Tall, curved lamp-posts,
With great electric globes bulging from their bent heads,
Challenged us on either side like sentinels.
The Avenue stretched endlessly before us,
Shining under their white glare,
Like a moonlit river.

WINTER NOCTURNE: THE HOSPITAL

A MASS of ledged rock
Steep and brown and long
Ribbed with white streaks of snow
Rises up suddenly from among level blocks of tenements,
Lifting the red hospital buildings on its top,
Higher
Over the huddled heads of the tenements
Over the uncoiled length of the Elevated
Up to the very disc of the moon.

AFTER THE LECTURE

I AM sick of believing and disbelieving —
Cults and creeds and systems of thought;
Philosophy, Morality, Cosmology, concern me no more —
Let the eternal verities go to the dogs!
Enough has been prattled about them —
Aristotle, Socrates, Plato;
Fichte and Hegel and Schelling and Kant.
It is all so simple to me —
I know it is Good to be out under the stars tonight,
And Evil to be pent up in a sultry lecture room.
I know it is Good to be walking beside you, dear,
And Evil of you to be philosophising so much.
I know it is Right to put my arms around you and kiss you,
And Wrong of you to deny me that kiss.
As to who made this ramshackle, top-heavy Universe,
Dear little girl,
Let God have the credit.

NOCTURNE: CENTRAL PARK

THE snow soughed ceaselessly through the air
In long thin threads like rain,
Ceaselessly, softly descending,
On the white sheeted trees with their freighted branches
Bending under the full moon;
On the undulating, creamy lawns
Glistening in the moonlight;
On the frozen surface of the Pond
Gleaming from behind the trees
Like a sheet of lacquered silver.
Clouds,
Big-bellied and fluffy
Like great grey whales
Sailed across the blue arch of the sky,
Brushing against the round disk of the moon,
Putting out the stars in their path
Like sputtering matches —
Only the moon shone steadfastly in the sky
Like a lighthouse set among the clouds.

We stood together,
Made one in each other's arms —
Under the low-bending branches of the sheeted trees,
Under the gray-dappled moonlit sky —
Her eyes shone through me like two moons

Lighting up strange vistas within my brain;
Her soft cheek pressed warmly against my own;
A stray wisp of black hair fell from under her hat, Caught between my lips, and filled my nostrils with an odor of crushed flowers —
And the snow soughed coolingly on our hot faces.

SPRING TRYST

WHAT shall I say to her first,
As she comes tripping to meet me,
Here at our tryst in the Park —
Comes with her wide hat aslant
And her brown eyes glowing beneath —
What shall I say to her first!

Shall I put on a piteous face
And pout:

“ I have waited so long;
The birds taunted me from the tree-tops as I stood here;—
Chirping two, two, two, two, two,
Silly, silly, silly, silly boy,
She will never come — she will never come —
See, you naughty birds,
She has come! ”

Or shall I look tenderly at her:

“ You are tired, dear;

Sit down . . .

What a sweet dress you have on to-day;
It goes so well with the Spring,
The rose on your cheeks and the green on your dress;
Only what shall we do with your eyes —
They are so brown! ”

Or shall I let my joy free,

Caged in my throat like a bird:

“Darling,

At last —

I am so happy!

All night I was wakeful thinking about you,

And my heart kept ticking the seconds;

I am so happy, so happy —

I think I could fly!”

Or shall I take her hand,

Gently,

And lead her down to the pond:

“Do you remember the time we stood here —

Here, under the very same trees,

When the trees were sheeted in snow,

And the pond was frozen across,

And the wind bit into our faces —

You jested:

‘Do you know —

We ought to draw up a petition to the Spring,

All lovers,

And ask him to hurry this way!’

Do you remember?” . . .

Or shall I not say anything at all to her,

But clasp her in my trembling arms,

And speak to her lips and her cheeks and her eyes and her brow —

Where shall I kiss her first!

AT THE FLORIST'S

THROUGH the big show window on the Avenue,
The flowers called to me as I stopped —
Piping and chirping and singing in a dozen different colors,
Like a tree-top of bright-plumaged birds:

“Take me to her, bring me with you, choose me for her;
I am sweet, I am sweeter; but I am more beautiful, but I am more graceful.”

I looked recollectively through the frosted glass.

“You are familiar to me,” said I to a little red flower who was louder than the rest —

“Aren't you a jasmine? ”

“Oh!” trilled the little red flower impatiently through her creamy throat,

“Only a month ago she passed here with you and told you my name —

Take me along with you and I'll forgive you for being so stupid.”

“Take us too,” breathed a cloud of white flowerets in a corner —

“Don't you remember us?

That time . . . on the Palisades . . . in June. . . .

She passed her fingers through our stems to show us to you, and we glittered on them so —

Like seed pearls, you said.”

“And me —

Don't you remember me?" said a little yellow flower naughtily.

"She pinned me near her bosom that time, and you crushed me there with your kisses."

I blushed.

"I — I remember something like that, but I can't think of your names.

You see . . . one sees you so seldom in the city. . . .

Please excuse me this once;

When she gets well I'll —

And who are you?" turned I to a big crimson flower that interrupted my eye.

"Never mind my name," answered she drawing herself up
haughtily on her tall stem,

"You'd forget it anyway if I told you —

Take me with you and she will know."

"Please take me to her," pleaded a little blue flower in a crowd of ferns.

"She never pointed me out to you, but I love her so much;

Take me along with you and make me happy —

I will look so beautiful in her hair!"

"I am truly sorry," confided I to the little blue flower as I walked away —

"I have only a dime for carfare and can't buy any of you for her —

But I will put you all in a poem and read it to her."

A POSTSCRIPT

DEAREST!

When I pressed you to my heart that time
And the impatient engine drowned our last good-bye
I walked back through the station,

Dizzy,

Because of the kiss I carried,

Poised tremulously,

Like a bird upon my lips.

Breathless,

Lest my breath blow it off;

Fearful,

As one who bears a fragile treasure home;—

I walked back through the crowded staring station

Into the crowded staring street,

With moist half-open lips —

Until the shy bird spread her wings

And flew within for shelter,

Making my heart flutter with her wings.

NOCTURNE

(FOR H. R.)

As we walked there by the park-wall
The moon went with us all the way,
Shining from behind the trees
Big and round and yellow —
Like a Chinese lantern
Dangling from the dark sky
By some invisible thread;
As we walked there by the park-wall
The moon followed us all the way,
Big-faced and piteous,
Like a wild creature
Snared behind the impenetrable net-work of the trees;
As we stopped there in the doorway
The moon watched us all the time,
Yellow-faced and envious
Like a jealous lover
Peering through the lattice of the trees.

A ROW OF POPLARS: CENTRAL PARK

THE poplars stood in a straight row,
Upright under the moon,
Facing the broad sidewalk of the Avenue —
Their tipped heads rising high over the park wall,
Their slender bodies cutting sharply through the humid air,
Like dark-draped statues.
Elms,
Thick-trunked and fan-shaped,
Arched towards each other across the walk,
Forming a leafy arcade by the park wall.
Crowds sauntered through the arcade,
In twos and threes and fours
Streaming back and forth —
Bevies of young girls,
In light summer dresses, with hair curled roguishly over their ears,
Laughing and chattering as they tripped along,
Coquetting boldly with the boys;
Plump-bodied, perspiring matrons trying to keep pace with their husbands,
In stiff silk dresses and little straw hats;
Sweethearts strolling arm-in-arm,
Looking at each other happily,
Oblivious of everything else.

At intervals
On the long benches by the park wall,
Couples sat huddled amorously together —
Their intertwined shadows projecting into the walk,
Under the passing feet.
Nearby,
On the other side of the park wall,
The poplars stood in a straight row,
Upright under the moon,
Virginally slender —
Holding themselves stiffly aloof.
Afar
The lake lay in the moonlight —
Gold and black and silver
Rippling together.

THE OLD COURTESAN

(AFTER THE BRONZE CAST BY AUGUSTE RODIN)

SHE is old and ugly —
Battered with years,
Like an inn
That life has deserted
Long ago —
Love once held revel in her heart;
Youth once lay captive on those breasts;
Now!
She is old and ugly —
Wrinkled with years,
Like a grape
That Life has squeezed out
Over its cup —
Time has pressed flat the fulness of her cheeks;
Lust has sucked dry the sweetness of her lips;
Now!
She is old and ugly —
Yellow with years,
Like a parchment
That life has scrawled over and over
With villainous rhymes.

PRIDE

YESTERDAY,
Passing through the Bowery,
I saw a dry crust of bread lying on a heap of offal,
A big, starved-looking yellow cat was rummaging through the heap.
She seemed to have noticed the crust of bread —
Evidently it was too hard for her teeth.
Just as I was turning the corner
A tramp lurched by.
He was not drunk,
He was hungry —
So he staggered as he walked.
I stopped.
My eyes fixed themselves on that heap of offal;
And on the dry crust of bread lying on top of it;
And on the old yellow cat rummaging beside it. . . .

The man stopped also;
He was examining that heap of offal —
His eyes wandered from the dry crust of bread to the old yellow cat.
Something within him drew him to that heap of offal;
Something within him revolted against it.
The man hesitated —
On the top of the heap squatted the old yellow cat —

Munching, munching, munching;
The man hesitated —
Finally he dragged himself away,
Proudly.

PSALM CLI

I

PRAISE ye the Lord, O Nations!
Praise ye the Lord with the bayonet and the bullet —
Praise Him with the scattering of shrapnel, praise Him with the throwing of hand-grenades —
Praise, praise ye the Lord!

II

Raise ye trenches on the hill-tops;
Build ye fortifications on the high places of the earth;
That ye may worship the Lord —
Fittingly!

III

Praise ye the Lord, for His vengeance consumeth the Nations;
Praise ye the Lord, for His terror abideth forever;
Praise Him with lyddite shells, praise Him with dum-dum bullets, praise Him with nitro-glycerine bombs —
Praise ye the Lord with light artillery and heavy artillery and all manner of ordnance!

IV

Praise ye the Lord with asphyxiating chlorine; Praise Him with the sacking of cities, praise Him with the raping of women, praise Him with the slaughter of children —

Praise Him with zeppelins, aeroplanes, dirigibles —

Praise ye the Lord on the face of the earth, praise ye the Lord in the depths of the sea, praise ye the Lord from the heights of the air!

V

Praise ye the Lord with submarine torpedoes —

Praise Him with battleships, cruisers, destroyers without number;

Praise Him with floating mines and stationary mines;—

Praise ye the Lord on the face of the earth, praise ye the Lord in the depths of the sea, praise ye the Lord from the heights of the sky!

VI

Praise ye the Lord, O Nations of the earth —

All ye that are dreaming of Peace and Brotherhood;

All ye that are praying for Justice and Law —

Let the guns of your dreadnoughts praise the Lord;

Let the mouths of your howitzers praise the Lord —

Praise, praise ye the Lord!

A LOST LEADER

(FOR C. E. R.)

I SAW him once,
In a great, hushed hall,
Where thousands held their breath to hear him —
Thousands of tired faces made eager with hope,
Listening, believing, worshipping.
His voice was like an insistent trumpet call;
His bold frank face shone under his gray hair,
Like the face of some warrior saint;
And his fixed eyes flamed out of their deep sockets.
And I thought of Christ addressing the multitude on the Mount;
And I thought of One crying in the wilderness;
And I waited there,
To touch his hand,
And look into his face;
So beautiful it was.

Christ turned Judas —
Christ himself,
Reviling his own disciples,
Betraying them — for what!
He who cried to us in the wilderness;
He who preached to us on the Mount;

Is this the same?
One with our foes at the Council
One with our Lords at the feast —
He who was the seven-fold trumpet blast,
Around the Jericho of Greed —
Now that the walls are crumbling;
Now that the city is ours —
Deserting our hosts in the battle;
Crowning our triumph with shame;—
This is a great defeat!

TO RUSSIA—1917

RUSSIA! Russia!

Sweet, vast, strong-shouldered Russia,

With the subtle soul and the simple, guileless heart —

I never knew I loved you,

Until this — your Day of Truth,

When your soul flared up through the leaden chains that bound you

And melted them like fire —

Melted the king's crown upon your head, melted the priest's cross in your hand;

Shrivelled the black robes around your limbs;

And you stood up among the nations,

Naked and beautiful,

Innocent,

As if Tyranny had never touched you.

Ah, how I watched you then!

How I looked at your beauty unrobed at last

Tenderly, reverently,

As I look at the body of my own love.

But when you picked up from the earth

The fallen torch of freedom,

And held it on high,

For all the world to see —

Then my tenderness became passion,

And my reverence became yearning,

And I knew that I was yours and you were mine,
Mother and sweetheart and comrade of my soul!

Russia! Russia!

Take me to your heart again;
Put your strong arms about me that I may feel them
And be assured of your forgiveness;
I have sinned against you greatly —
I did not know you;
I feared you,
Because of the king's crown that you wore and the priest's cross that you held
And the black robes that shrouded your limbs —
I fled from you
To an alien country across the sea;
I learned her tongue and forgot your face;
I thought her thoughts and sang her songs;
And in your hour of trial I was not by your side,
To think your thoughts and to sing your songs
And to fight your fight —
Forgive me!
I saw only your black robes;
I did not see the beautiful body beneath
And the Diadem dazzled my eyes from your face —
Now I know!
Now I see!
I will fly to you,
And help you upbear in your arms
The torch of the new-born Freedom
That you hold for the world.
I will learn your tongue and go in your ways,
And breathe out on your steppes, in your forests,
New York's fever and dust —

Turgenieff, Tolstoy, Dostoyeffsky, Gorki, Tcheckoff, Andreyeff, Pushkin,
Souls of your living and dead,
Immortal alike —
I will sit at their feet and learn from them
How to love you!
I will watch their lips and follow their eyes;
And perhaps,
If I prove myself worthy to love,
I will be admitted to the table —
A humble guest.

THIS BOOK IS DUE ON THE LAST DATE STAMPED BELOW

AN INITIAL FINE OF 25 CENTS
WILL BE ASSESSED FOR FAILURE TO RETURN
THIS BOOK ON THE DATE DUE. THE PENALTY
WILL INCREASE TO 50 CENTS ON THE FOURTH
DAY AND TO $1.00 ON THE SEVENTH DAY OVERDUE.

MAY 15 1939

SEP 17 1939

NOV 22 1946

REC'D CIRC DEPT

JUN 28 '46

YB 73294

gkwa
125

125

